Cartoons from "Tokyo Puck," the Leading Comic Weekly of Japan, Showing the Public Sentiment Against America

RUBBER OR KNIFE.
The dependent clause of the Art. II. of the Japan American Treaty seems to be the source of the pending troubles. Let us strike it out, when it comes to be revised in 1909, by means of a rubber. If the rubber proves incapable, why the knife will do all right.

Japan to Uncle Sam: "Look here, old man, you need a shave."

After the American War Secretary, Mr. Taft's visit to Japan we shall have....(?)

After the Russian War Minister, General Kuropatkin's visit to Japan we had Russo-Japanese War.

Were Tokyo Puck a Prime Minister he would send warship to blow up Frisco.

RECENT editions of the most popular and widely circulated newspapers of Japan indicate that that country is determined to force a war upon the United States.

These publications argue that the recent victory of Japan over the great Russian Empire proves that the island empire could easily conquer the United States, and apparently the population is only too willing to accept this view.

The indemnity idea is very conspicuous in many of the anti-American attacks. The Japanese imagine that if they could conquer the United States, the richest country in the world, they could extort from us an enormous indemnity, which would enable them to maintain their military organization.

A remarkable exhibition of the Japanese attitude may be found in Tokyo Puck, which is the leading humorous and illustrated political weekly of the empire. Recent numbers have been filled largely and sometimes entirely with violent attacks upon Americans, representing them as murderers, savages and ruffians.

Some of the most virulent anti-American cartoons published by Tokyo Puck are reprinted on this page. They are reproduced here in the colors in which they appear in the original. Tokyo Puck is a biting mass of color from first page to last, and is eminently calculated to inflame a warlike population. Red blood and red ink flow on every page.

As told in our old legend, Momotaro in olden times conquered the Demon's Island. At present time our fellow countrymen are suffering from humiliation and persecution in San Francisco, which is the Demon's Island of to-day. Momotaro of the twentieth century should weigh anchor, without delay, for the cursed island to rescue the brethren and to return home laden with the treasures of indemnity.

curious mistakes in the English, but it is nearly always perfectly comprehensible. Here is a passage from Tokyo Puck which strikingly illustrates the periodical's attitude on the American question:

THE LAND OF RIOT.

A Tokyo journalist of world-wide fame and one of the best informed persons on this question, on being asked for his opinion, said in part as follows: "President Roosevelt is the true friend of Japan and the Japanese. There's no doubt about it. But circumstances are preventing him from being true to his principle—principle of right and justice, not only Japan. President Roosevelt himself does not mean to be a fighter. But, the circumstances of the United States forces him to be one. He has to fight with the oil magnate, railroad magnate and other trust magnates in various lines, all of whom bring of formidable power and immense resources. On the other hand the President is fighting with the riotous spirit of the corrupted bosses and anarchic tendency of the labour class. Lynchings are prevalent not only in the Southern States. Strikes and mobs are of frequent occurrences in the great cities, the police being often as available. The United States is now far from being a land of Liberty and a model republic. On the contrary the country stands on the verge of being thrown into chaotic abyss.

It is interestingly horrible to see what is the ruling spirit of the present United States. The local administration is in the hand of

Thus banded the colored porter as he marched down the aisle of the parlor car of the Washington express that had left Atlanta, Ga., just long enough to have picked a speed of twenty miles an hour.

Everybody looked on indignantly, but the portliest girl in the car—a bewitching dark-eyed beauty in a most charming traveling costume—raised the novel she was reading and looked to the porter, who appeared obsequiously, with the perfect ease of a professional.

"I am Miss Christian," she said in a clear, cool, untroubled voice.
"Yes, Miss Christian," he replied, "ye are, Miss Christian," and the porter bowed and disappeared.

There were admiring glances from all parts of the car at Miss Julia Jackson Christian, who opened the envelope. Without a single shudder crossing her sweet face, through the murmur of her low uttered words she brought her red lips together, she read this message:

"Following you on second section.
Wait for me at Charlotte, FATHER."
And then she said to herself:
"Well, I'm Stonewall Jackson's granddaughter, on my mother's side, and I'm riding ahead, on the first section. I don't see where papa comes in at all. I think

WHO BIDS FOR THIS KINGDOM?

The Strange African Land of Agbosmi Offered for $200,000, with 28 Wives, a Crown and Throne of Skulls, an Amazon Bodyguard, and a Splendid Collection of Heathen Idols.

Paris, Aug. 17. mitted to pass without the shedding of a single drop of human blood. King with a crown and scepter When the king sits in state upon his throne, his surroundings are luxuriously adorned with the skulls of his enemies.

The opportunity is now offered to any body who is willing to pay a round sum of money. Surely some American millionaire tired of being a mere beef king or chewing gum king will accept this offer. King Yborshi of Agbosmi, in Africa, has advertised his kingdom for sale in the Paris and London newspapers. He has many other African monarchs he has been fascinated by the delights of Paris and he desires to spend the rest of his life here. He is an intelligent, observant, kindhearted man and he has noticed how eagerly the Europeans and even Americans seek this and distinctions that mark them out from the mass of their fellow men. He has noted with interest the case of Jacques Louverture, who spent a fortune in 1793 to make himself Emperor of the Saint-Denis, and he has heard of the millions of wealthy Englishmen to pay vast sums for titles that give them no real power.

"If these rich men are willing to give large sums for such empty honors, they ought to pay very handsomely for a real kingdom, with all the privileges of absolute monarchy," says King Yborshi. "I shall be happy to turn over to any white man for $200,000, my kingdom, my palace, my wives, my medicine men, my flocks, my herds, my elephants, my crown and throne of skulls and all my state regalia. My successor can marry all the women in the kingdom, execute all the laws, tax them all to death or do anything else he pleases with them."

"My wants are modest. I have no more ambition to be king. On the income of $200,000 I can live comfortably in Paris. After tasting the joys of life in this city I have decided to get back to the twenty-eight wives I left at home."

"I am sure you will admit that this is a splendid bargain for any man who desires the pomp and splendor of a throne, and does not shrink from the heavy care of state."

Agbosmi, the land which King Yborshi wishes to sell, is situated on the borderland between the British and French possessions on the Guinea coast, which is part of the West Coast of Africa. It is one of the oldest kingdoms in Africa and is very well behaved and orderly, otherwise it would have been absorbed by the neighboring European powers.

The Bahr River flows through King Yborshi's territory, which is about 250 miles long and 100 miles wide.

The capital of the kingdom is called Agbosmi and is a very important collection of mud houses with roofs of thatched reeds. Here is the royal palace, a vast oval circle, having the apartments of the king in the center, flanked on each side by the houses of wives, executives, magistrates and court officials.

Like nearly every kingdom of Africa, that of Agbosmi is maintained by terror and bloodshed. When the king is ill a few dozen victims are sacrificed to appease the angry gods or demons. When he gets better a still larger number is sacrificed to celebrate the happy event. Hardly an event of any importance to the king of Agbosmi is without a sacrifice.

tastically decorated axes, stand at his side, ready to swoop forward and chop off the head of any wretch who irritates His Majesty. Standing humbly behind his throne are his twenty-eight wives, chosen from among the handsomest, sturdiest and wisest girls in the kingdom. This is not to say that His Majesty is limited to twenty-eight, for he can take all there are in his kingdom, but only those few have been considered worthy of the honor of entering his harem, and he finds them quite enough, or he would not be eager to abandon them all for the pleasure of living in Paris.

About His Majesty's throne stand the bodyguard of two hundred Amazons, who form the pick of his fighting force, occupying a position corresponding to that of the Life Guards in the British Army. These women soldiers are much more savage and possessing an unusual quantity of land and an unusual number of wives and slaves. At coronation time they proceed to the house of each victim one after another. They wear to the king, while the victims stick wretched headbands of human bones and spears into them to test their hardihood. On the second day the entire nation is present before the king to review. He places over a fire of damp reeds, which produces a suffocating fumes. This may make him confess his guilt, and then he is killed and eaten. Those persons from a close conversation in Agbosmi, and are the only persons who possess any power besides the king. He single and fanatical they give the king's whims, produce rain and this ceremony supplies the king with a constant, discover enemies of the king, handsome wretched anyone who he begins ward of phages and famines, and, to his ruin. On the fourth day the actual coronation takes place. The king stands in front of his palace before the Amazons, soldiers, courtiers and the assembled natives. The medicine men stand him, with great solemnity the crowns of three skulls and, he places it upon his head. Then he takes the scepter of bones in his hand and cries out one word in the Agbosmi language meaning "Obu!" The people all throw themselves flat on the ground with their faces down. The king then dances upon their backs, shaking his spear like a maul and striking it into one of them occasionally in token of his sovereignty. It is a point of court etiquette not to bow when the ruler is about to pass.

On the fifth day comes with a great carnival. The king, of course, never takes any part in the country, being a complete monarch, but he finds it more profitable in the long run to take part in the country's business, thus encouraging them to go on extracting booty from neighboring states. The king of Agbosmi, however, is not a conqueror, but a peace-loving ruler. He has a large number of slaves, but he does not use them for labor. It is just as important to have a style of your own as it is to have a style of your own.

How the Shah Nasr-ed-Din Managed His Harem and His 1,500 Wives.

By Eustace de Lancy and Douglas Sladen.

POUNCEY is less general in Persia than one would believe. The popular idea of Oriental harem life is based upon the exaggeration of which our naturally curious minds are prone to indulge. For example, as we are told that Nasr-ed-Din Shah left fifteen hundred widows, we cannot imagine the smallest harem without a prodigious number.

The harem, properly speaking, is a luxury, and just as there are men in New York who have no motor car, so there are men in Persia who have no harem.

The harem of Nasr-ed-Din Shah was an extreme because every year it was augmented by the wives whom he had married by the sword and by the wives whom he had married by the sword.

The harem of Nasr-ed-Din Shah was an extreme because every year it was augmented by the wives whom he had married by the sword and by the wives whom he had married by the sword.

Everything was done to the utility for the day, and he had no time to do anything else. As he had the power of the law, he was able to do anything he wanted to do. He was able to do anything he wanted to do. He was able to do anything he wanted to do.

As he had the power of the law, he was able to do anything he wanted to do. He was able to do anything he wanted to do. He was able to do anything he wanted to do.

The Telegraphers' Strike

Would Not IMPARTIAL ARBITRATION Be Better Than Arrogance and Stubbornness That Disregard Public Welfare?

CTHE strike of the telegraph operators for better conditions in pay and in hours is not a private affair between employers and employed. It is an affair that concerns the entire people. It inconveniences all of the citizens. It interferes seriously with business men. It emphasizes the danger of putting great national monopolies upon which the people depend entirely out of the people's control.

The telegraph companies are capitalized for enormous sums. This great capitalization and over-capitalization do not represent property owned by the telegraph companies, nor construction for which they have paid.

The great capitalization represents concessions granted by the people. It represents the right to make a great fortune because of the numbers of the people and their necessities.

These franchises and this right are capitalized at enormous sums. The value is not behind them except as that value is represented in the franchises enjoyed by permission given by the people.

Surely the people whose consent makes possible the great value of the telegraph companies are entitled to some consideration in the management of the companies, in a strike of workmen as well as in other matters.

The demands which the strikers make are not extravagant. They ask for conditions which have voluntarily been granted by this newspaper to the telegraphers whom it personally employs. In fact the operators do not demand of the companies even as the maximum of pay the minimum which this newspaper pays to its telegraphers.

If a concern engaged in private business, not profiting by any public franchise, can pay men satisfactorily, and give them reasonable working hours, surely a great corporation, able to capitalize the public's gift at tens of millions, can afford to do so.

It is not the intention here to discuss in detail the demands of the telegraphers or the reasons for the company refusing to grant these demands.

It is certain that the cost of living has increased greatly of late years, whereas the telegraphers have received no advance in pay adequate to the increase of the cost of living.

Telegraph companies recently have greatly increased their charges, and have greatly increased their gross revenue.

It cannot honestly be said that the companies' reasons under modern conditions for charging the public higher rates are any better than the reasons put forward by the workmen for demanding better pay.

The question which the people of the country must put to the telegraph corporations is this:

WHY SHOULD NOT THE COMPANIES TAKE A REASONABLE VIEW OF THE SITUATION AND ADJUST THE DIFFERENCES BY ARBITRATION?

The public have a right to ask at least that some attention be paid to THEIR interests involved.

The public must supply the wages of the employee and the profits of the telegraph corporations. In the end the public must foot all the bills, yet the telegraph corporation, which exists by virtue of the public permission, carries on internal conflicts, which their employees as though there were no third party interested at all.

If the employees arbitrarily demanded a change in conditions, refusing to discuss issues or submit to arbitration, conditions would be different.

But the employees, on the contrary, ask for arbitration and pledge themselves to abide by it.

It is difficult for an impartial man to understand why the companies absolutely decline all arbitration. In the business of publishing newspapers, which is not essentially less complicated than any other important business, arbitration is the rule when questions as to wages or hours are discussed.

Newspapers have recently submitted to arbitration questions pending between themselves and their employees, and with satisfactory results to both sides.

If employer and the employee cannot agree when the question at issue is one of reasonable reward, for satisfactory readjustment, nothing could be fairer certainly than to submit to the judgments of impartial arbitrators.

If the big telegraph companies will consent to arbitration they would relieve the public from inconvenience, and the business of the country from injury. AND THEY WILL NOT HAVE TO GRANT ANY DEMANDS THAT AN IMPARTIAL ARBITRATION BOARD SHALL NOT PROHIBIT.

Certainly the telegraph companies would not have it said that they are unwilling to grant JUST DEMANDS OF THEIR EMPLOYEES. They would not have it said that they are careless of public welfare or unwilling to relieve the public of any unnecessary inconvenience, to remove any obstacle to the conduct of the business of the country. THEN WHY NOT ARBITRATE?

Will Mr. Gould and Mr. Mackay, the heads of the two great telegraph companies, explain what there is about their case which makes them unwilling to submit it to an impartial court of arbitration? When two men or two organizations disagree, and when one is willing to submit to arbitration and the other is not willing, the opinion formed by the public cannot be doubtful.

It must be clear that the sole reason for accepting arbitration either KNOWS that it is in the wrong or relies on brute force and obduracy to win a victory that might not result from open discussion and a fair decision by impartial judges.

The telegraph companies exist by virtue of public permission. They owe everything that they have to the public, and therefore they owe consideration to the public's convenience and to its feelings.

There is no doubt that public sentiment is and must be on the side of the employees so long as the corporations refuse to submit their side of the case to impartial, unprejudiced men.

The duty of the telegraph company is to arbitrate. And the duty of the public is to support the employees and to sympathize with them so long as arbitration shall be refused.

The Struggle of Centuries

thousands die

He would have oppressed the poor in his lifetime, murdered thousands, tens or hundreds of thousands, and then given away a little money after death, happy in the belief that he had bought happiness for his own miserable soul.

Our big Carnegies and Rockefellers are not too pleasant to contemplate from certain points of view. But certainly Progress has done wonders for them. They live on a little milk and seltzer. Their wildest debauch is a game of golf or the excitement of hearing themselves praised as philanthropists.

They build universities, libraries, hospitals. Instead of firing out armies to kill human beings, they pay scientists to study disease.

Nothing is more marvelous than the effect that Progress has had even upon the most selfish and most powerful of men.

It is a good thing for people to be optimistic, to take a cheerful view of the world. The man with a cheerful view is more apt to grow and succeed than the gloomy, discouraged man. Gloom depresses the heart and weakens the individual's power.

If you have time on this Sunday, think about this picture for yourself. And if you have children about you, talk it over with them, and explain to them the meaning of the picture and the long struggle that it represents.

Ignorance held the world first, and then Progress began to take a firmer and firmer hold upon it. Think of all the machines, steam replacing the ox-cart, electricity replacing steam, the telephone and the "moving picture" displacing the messenger, the phonograph, and a host of material marvels that have come to shame the feeble inventions of imagination.

It is a picture to make men feel hopeful. Lucky the man who can put his little individuality on the side of that big giant Progress, and in his capacity to pull in the right direction, and help to take the earth away from the ignorance that clings to it so desperately.

ally drunk was the exception when the last century began. And today drunkenness means failure. Jive, a scorn and pity. Progress has brought that down from the high places to the gutter.

And Progress has also fought poverty, although the fight is still on and will last for years.

A death from starvation in our day is a monstrous, sensational and unusual thing. It was the commonest of events only recently.

Look where you please in the world and you will find that conditions are getting better. There ARE discouraging symptoms, and those that think only of TO-DAY, with no general survey of what has happened in the past, get discouraged. But they have no reason to be discouraged. Our present trouble—in America, the dishonesty of corporations and their managers, the incomprehensible greed of men suddenly made rich, are distressing. But we need not be discouraged by these things.

The great industrial kings, princes and handis are building up now wonderful institutions that eventually will bless the people AND BELONG TO THE PEOPLE.

In all the world's history the adventurous buccanner and killer has been followed by the peaceful farmer, by the happy population. In our industry these savages of finance will be followed by millions and tens of millions of human beings, made more comfortable by the work roughly done at first.

And even taking the big men, the big pirates at their work, how much better they are, thanks to Progress, than in the old days.

Not so long ago a man with Rockefeller's money would have been absolutely above criticism, above the reach of the people. He would have lived a life of shameful self-indulgence, debauching thousands and keeping other destroyed human beings almost as fast as the patent mothers of the world created them. One single plague could wipe out half of all creatures living. It was even necessary to pass laws forbidding the survivors to feed upon the bodies of the dead.

Progress has changed THAT at least, and we ought to remember it. To remind us of our imperfections we still have the dreadful plague of consumption, which kills us off in appalling numbers. It is nothing like the Black Death that broke down the lives of human beings as heavy hail breaks the window pane.

But it is a reminder, as we see children and women dying BECAUSE THEY ARE POOR, that Progress has still a long road to travel.

Drunkenness, another sister of Ignorance, still has a hold on human beings, and still represents a difficult fight. But as we fight against intemperance in ourselves or in others we must remember, by way of encouragement, that intemperance is fast diminishing as disease has diminished.

Where there were ten drunken men or women formerly you will hardly find one now. And where drunkenness was looked upon as the excusable self-indulgence of great men a hundred years or less ago, it is now looked upon with contempt by all classes.

The great man NOT occasion-

Progress Is Beating Ignorance. There Is No Cause for Discouragement. Darkness and Ignorance Will Be Defeated in the End.

HERE is a picture of a AND YOU CAN SEE THEM struggle as old as ONLY IN MUSEUMS.

the life of humanity. Ignorance once lighted bonfires on this earth. It to burn up human beings in every country calling itself civilized. But progress HAS PUT OUT THOSE FIRES. And they are replaced by the newer fires that burn under locomotives and in factories, and in the houses of poor people where formerly fires were never known.

Only a few years ago the work-ignominy who could read and write was an exception. Now the man, woman or child over seven that cannot read and write is an exception.

Ignorance is fast losing its power. Ignorance is fast losing its power. Ignorance is fast losing its power.

But it has been steadily losing hold ON THE BRAINS OF HUMANITY the fight of centuries. It will continue to lose, until the days of its power shall be only a memory.

Ignorance once worked the rack, the thumbscrew and the wheel in every country calling itself civilized. BUT PROGRESS HAS DESTROYED THOSE THINGS.

Only a few centuries back and the rulers of the world themselves could not read or write, and they gloried in the fact. They looked down upon "the clerks" that did their writing for them. Disease, sister of Ignorance, not long ago

LOTTA CRABTREE AND HER $26,000 "SONOMA GIRL" THAT LOST TO LIMBING "HIGH BALL"

Undaunted by Defeats, Looks for Final Triumph

"I'm Proud of Sonoma Girl," Declares Former Actress, "Just Wait and You Will See."

TALKS OF LIFE SUCCESS

Expert Describes How Pitted Mare, Popular Idol, Went to Defeat at Readville Races.

By Eleanor Ames.

HE failure of a $26,000 mare to win at Readville during the past week has brought the former stage favorite, Lotta Crabtree, more prominently before the public than she has been since the much-revered day a dozen or more years ago, when a petite, vivacious, fascinating blonde beauty made her last curtain bow and quit the stage forever.

The present generation knows Lotta Crabtree as the owner of the famous mare, Sonoma Girl, who had all the Readville plums selected, laid aside and marked for her, and at the last moment failed to capture what the public rated her just debts.

But to many of those who know Sonoma Girl's sensational story, her owner's name takes them away from the race track, to the memory of the days when Lotta, with her wit and grace, and a genius that seemed far too big for such a tiny body, held them spellbound as no horse race has ever or ever shall hold them. It is Lotta, the land owner, Lotta, the turf enthusiast, that the children of the day know.

It is Lotta, the comedienne; Lotta, who moved them to tears and dried their tears by laughter; that their parents hold in memory.

And the real Lotta Crabtree? Who is she?

The Real Lotta Crabtree

Draw the mental picture of a petite woman with a nose of red-gold hair, sparkling blue eyes, the complexion of a debutante, a clear, ringing laugh, and rich, full lips.

That is Lotta, a woman who has been nourished from childhood on public applause, whose genius might have dated time, and who has snuffed deep of the overflowing cup of success, and set it down while the champagne was still full and fresh and rich and free, her brother's Summer home at Ocean Bluffs, where she was a pet of the pink-tinted, a blunder of cream silk, a blunder of velvet, a blunder of gold, a blunder of silver, a blunder of all the good things of life.

And her slender throat, and her bright, black velvet hair, and her mounting her marvelous golden hair as a carved amber.

She sat in a low leather chair in the library, with "Trotter" and "The Terrier" curled in her arms, and a theatrical fox terrier lying at her feet on the hem of her gown and looking with limpid eyes at his lucky companion.

Richest Retired Actress

Lotta Crabtree is not to be the richest retired actress in America. She owns business blocks, hotels, theatre and building but in half a dozen cities, not to mention her bank stock and trotting horses, and the jewelry, books and curios that enrich her home.

I asked her the rule for success. "You have been so successful," I asked. "Why not?" she asked. "I have followed my head and not my heart, and I have followed my heart and not my head."

"There isn't any rule for success," she replied. "There isn't any rule for anything in this world. Experience may prove helpful as warnings or suggestions, but success is too big a thing to be won by rule."

"No rules for Success?" "No, my dear, no," she emphasized. "No one can tell another person how to be successful."

"It is easier to tell how to fail," she said.

Lotta Crabtree's Aphorisms of Life

THERE isn't any rule for success. There isn't any rule for anything in this world.

Experiences may prove helpful as warnings or suggestions, but success is too big a thing to be won by a rule.

No artist should be hampered by financial responsibility. The only way for an actress to accumulate money is to have some one who loves her devotedly take it and save it for her.

To throw away money because you are prosperous is not being good-hearted, because the day will come when you will have to be taken care of.

Make yourself independent first and then be what the world calls "good-hearted."

I do not believe in making farewell tours on the strength of past glories. When you've had your success, be content to stop and rest. You lose the love and sympathy of the public, to whom you owe so much.

Put serious thought into everything you do, your present and your future. People go broke for lack of serious thought.

"Never be nervous!" rang the rich tones. "When I left the stage I was at the height of my success. I had had my day, and a good day it was. I left before it began to fade."

"I have never cared to go back. I have looked upon my stage life as something splendid and full of joy, but something that is ended. I have no patience with these farewell tours which rest on the strength of past glories."

"When you've had your success, be content, I say, to leave it before you lose the love and sympathy of the public to whom you owe so much."

"I can't say to you, 'I am so happy to see you,' but I can say to you, 'I am so glad to see you.'"

Hard Luck Fails To Shake Lotta's Faith in Her Pets

By Edward E. Cogswell.

IT is one of the laws of nature that we creep before we walk, and we follow in other lines of endeavor we may undertake in after life.

Crabtree did not start with paying enormous sums of money for her trotting and racing, but from a very modest beginning gradually succeeded the sale list she started the week by paying $2,000 for Sonoma Girl.

In the neighborhood of six or seven years ago it was first known that Lotta was at all interested in the light horse world, and that was through her brother Jack buying Fanny 12-13, a downy mare, which she played in Trainer Dick Lawrence's stable.

After coming to the conclusion that Lotta was not at all interested in the light horse world, and that was through her brother Jack buying Fanny 12-13, a downy mare, which she played in Trainer Dick Lawrence's stable.

Infatuated With Sonoma

Crabtree became infatuated with Sonoma Girl. He much desired that Lotta buy her.

THREE MORE THEATRES TO OPEN DOORS

Hollis, Howard and Lyceum Begin Season with Big Shows; Others Preparing to Open.

THREE more theatres in Boston, their doors tomorrow, for the first time since the summer of 1906, will be open on Labor Day. The Lyceum, the Howard and the Hollis, will begin their seasons with big shows. The fact that the theatres are to be the biggest, busiest and best that have been in Boston since the summer of 1906, is a fact that should be noted. Here are some of the shows that are to be presented at the various theatres.

What the Theatres Offer

Hollis Street Theatre

Tomorrow night at the Hollis Street Theatre the season will be inaugurated with a big show. The show is "The Girl Who Came to Stay," a play by the famous playwright, George Bernard Shaw. ## A Full Carload of Gray Enamel Ware at Less Than Half Price

A whole year has rolled around, but the sale of enamel ware at half price a year ago tomorrow is still fresh in the memory of the many thousands who bought their season's supply. This time the values are even greater, for we have bought a manufacturer's entire run of kiln of a tremendous quantity, due to slight imperfections. Every piece is warranted to give satisfaction. We expect to sell the entire lot this week.

The crack Hawthorne team of Roxbury added another to their long string of victories by doing down the Forest Hills team yesterday at the annual Marcella street meet, held by the club.

Haworth played a very good game, faulting thirteen of his 22 shots. The scores of the game was 100, batting of Barrett, he making a hit every time up, and the all round playing of Lyons for the Hawthornes.
 For and Metcormack excelled for the team. The Hawthornes have won four

HUGE SIX-MASTER CROWLEY LAUNCHED

Bostonians See Big Schooner Take Her Initial Dip at Rockland.
CAPTAIN'S WIFE SPONSOR

Rockland, Me., Aug. 24.—Bedecked with flags and draped with white from all the walls in the harbor, the six-master schooner Martha M. Crowley, the queen of coast craft, was launched here today in the presence of over 8,000 people.

The schooner, a 100-ton ship, was built by the Thomas W. Lewis and is the property of the Boston Harbor Trust. The launch was sponsored by Mrs. Martha M. Crowley, wife of the captain of the schooner. The launch was held at Rockland, Me., and the schooner was launched at 11:45 a.m. The launch was held at Rockland, Me., and the schooner was launched at 11:45 a.m.

After the long craft had been securely anchored in the waters of the Penobscot, the guests were taken ashore and boarded the launch. The launch was then taken to the shore where it was secured. The launch was then taken to the shore where it was secured.

MAN, LIKE WIFE, DIES BY BREAKING NECK

Washington, Va., Aug. 24.—The discovery of the body of Philip Rogers beside the remains of his wife and the subsequent finding in the coroner's jury that death resulted from a broken neck, due to a fall from a barrel, is a case of the kind that is not often met with. The lower jaw of the man was broken in two places and the spine was killed by falling backward in his chair while alone.

SKELETON MAY REVEAL CRIME

Whether murder was committed, and if so by whom, is a mystery which confronts the police of Everett in the finding of the skeleton of a man washed in an old box which was dug up near the water front of the works of the New England and Cape Cod Companies plant at work.

Two indications in the skull of the man were so indicative that he must have been shot, and might have been killed in the box. The body was found on the banks of the Mystic.

LOWELL "MIDDY" CAUGHT IN FLIGHT

Angelo, Aug. 24.—Howard Hamilton, a fugitive from justice, was caught in flight at Lowell, Mass., and is now in the custody of the local police.

PRESIDENT LOOSEVELT

says of a writer in September Cosmopolitan, in his Agricultural College address at Lansing, Mich.: "I cordially recommend the first chapter of 'Aunt Jane of Kentucky' for use as a tract in all families where the men folks tend to selfish or thoughtless or overbearing disregard of the rights of their womankind." In the September Cosmopolitan is a new and specially interesting story of the "Aunt Jane" series.

BERNARD SHAW

the famous Irish playwright, says of the American woman: "She has no conscience"; "She has no sex"; "The exploitation of women in America is a horror, it is hideous"; "English women are more practical"; and continues in a like strain in a remarkable interview in September Cosmopolitan.

ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

won his fame in fiction as the author of the most widely read and admired Western stories ever written—the "Wolville" series. The "Wolville" stories of a few years ago are bettered in a new series of Western yarns in the "Old Cattleman" now running in the Cosmopolitan. "The Rose of Wolville" is the next "Wolville" story in September Cosmopolitan.

Many other remarkable timely features and stories of fascinating interest. One noteworthy feature in September Cosmopolitan is a new poem that would do credit to the great poets of time gone by. James Bryce, the British Ambassador to the United States and author of "The American Commonwealth," implied a short while ago that America lacked poets. In September Cosmopolitan is a new poem which is a complete refutation of Mr. Bryce's opinion. "A Wine of Wizardry," by George Sterling, is declared by no less a critic than Ambrose Bierce to be the greatest poem since the days of Keats and Shelley.
